Information can be shared within an enterprise using a variety of computer software tools. A simple approach is for an individual to share the information in an electronic mail or message to another person. In this approach, the sender must type in the recipients email address and a message may be transmitted to that email address. In an internal approach, a message is typically sent to a distribution list and is limited only to the recipients that are on the distribution list. The distribution list approach can be cumbersome. One or more individuals must create the distribution
